ROSLINDALE IS ONE OF THE "SUBWAY SUBURBS" to the south of Boston (all were eventually annexed by the city) and it has maintained its residential character. After years of renting, Dorothy and I have bought a small house here. Most Boston 'neighborhoods' are made up of multi-family structures, but our area is almost entirely single-family and comparatively quiet.

That was composed in the stick, and reads that way most likely, but it served its purpose. Despite my continuing preoccupation with my computer and my decision to work virtually full-time (I do have a house to pay for,) I hope to resume POETRY BY THE PAGE by early next year. Now that I'm warmed up, and with the inspiration and example of all the great work in the bundles, I look forward to many happy hours of Now wait a minute; hours?!?
